

SLI

- Dreads he the twanging of the archer's string?
Or ling'ring stones from the Phœnician slings? Sandys.
Slings have so much greater swiftness than a stone thrown from the hand, by how much the end of the slings is farther off from the shoulder-joint, the center of motion. Wilkins.
The Tuscan king
Laid by the lance, and took him to the slings;
Thrice whir'd the thong around his head, and threw
The heated lead, half melted as it flew. Dryden's Æn.
Whirl'd from a slings, or from an engine thrown,
Amidst the fœces, as flies a mighty stone,
So flew the beast. Dryden's Ovid.
2. A throw; a stroke.
"Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With fuck'd and glutted offal, at one slings
Of thy victorious arm, well-pleasing son. Milt. Par. Lof.
3. A kind of hanging bandage.
To SLING. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To throw by a sling.
2. To throw; to cast. Not very proper.
Ætina's entrails fraught with fire,
That now casts out dark fumes and pitchy clouds,
Incens'd, or tears up mountains by the roots,
Or slings a broken rock aloft in air. Addison.
3. To hang loosely by a string.
From rivers drive the kids, and slings your hook;
Anon I'll wash 'em in the shallow brook. Dryden.
4. To move by means of a rope.
Cœnus I saw amidst the shouts
Of mariners, and busy care to slings
His horses soon ashore. Dryden's Cleomenes.
They slung up one of their largest hogheads, then rolled it towards my hand, and beat out the top. Gulliver's Travels.
SLINGER. n. f. [from slings.] One who slings or uses the sling.
The slingers went about it, and snote it. 2 Kings iii. 25.
To SLINK. v. n. preter. slank. [Irish, Saxon, to creep.] To sneak; to steal out of the way.
We will slink away in supper-time, disguise us at my lodgings, and return all in an hour. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.
As we do turn our backs
From our companion, thrown into his grave,
So his familiars from his buried fortunes Slink away. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.
He, after Eve seduc'd, unmind'd slink
Into the wood fast by. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Not far from hence doth dwell
A cunning man, high Sidrophel,
To whom all people far and near
On deep importances repair;
When brass and pewter hap to stray,
And linen slinks out of the way. Hudibras.
She sunk into a corner, where she lay trembling 'till the company went their way. L'Estrange.
He would pinch the children in the dark, and then slink into a corner, as if no body had done it. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.
A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-lost through a chink;
But having amply stuff'd his skin,
Could not get out as he got in. Pope's Epist. of Horace.
We have a suspicious, fearful, and constrained countenance, often turning back, and slinking through narrow lanes. Swift.
To prevent a mare's slinking her foal, in snowy weather keep her where she may have good spring-water to drink. Mort.
To SLIP. v. n. [Irish, Saxon; slippen, Dutch.]
1. To slide; not to tread firm.
If a man walks over a narrow bridge, when he is drunk, it is no wonder that he forgets his caution while he overlooks his danger; but he who is sober, and views that nice separation between himself and the devouring deep, so that, if he should slip, he sees his grave gaping under him, surely must needs take every step with horror and the utmost caution. Sext.
A skilful dancer on the ropes slips willingly, and makes a seeming stumble, that you may think him in great hazard, while he is only giving you a proof of his dexterity. Dryden.
If after some distinguish'd leap
He drops his pole, and seems to slip,
Straight gath'ring all his active strength,
He rises higher half his length. Prior.
2. To slide; to glide.
Oh Ladon, happy Ladon! rather slide than run by her, lest thou shouldst make her legs slip from her. Sidney.
They trim their feathers, which makes them oily and slip- pery, that the water may slip off them. Mortimer's Hu-banary.
3. To move or fly out of place.
Sometimes the ankle-bone is apt to turn out on either side, by reason of relaxation, which though you reduce, yet, upon the next walking on it, the bone slips out again. Wifeman.
4. To sneak; to slink.
From her most beauly company
I can restrain, in mind to slip away,
Soon as appear'd safe opportunity. Spenser.

SLI

- When Judas saw that his host slip away, he was sore troubled.
I'll slip down out of my lodging. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Thus one tradesman slips away,
To give his partner fairer play. Prior.
5. To glide; to pass unexpectedly or imperceptibly.
The banks of either side seeming arms of the loving earth, that fain would embrace it, and the river a wanton nymph, which still would slip from it. Sidney.
The blessing of the Lord shall slip from thee, without doing thee any good, if thou hast not ceased from doing evil. Taylor.
Slipping from thy mother's eye thou went Alone into the temple; there was found
Among the gravest rabbies disputant,
On points and questions fitting Moses' chair. Milton.
Thrice around his neck his arms he threw,
And thrice the flitting shadow slipp'd away,
Like winds or empty dreams that fly the day. Dryden.
Though with pale cheeks, wet beard, and dropping hair,
None but my Ceyx could appear so fair,
I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace;
But through my arms he slipped, and vanish'd from the place. Dryden.
When a corn slips out of their paws, they take hold of it again. Addison's Spectator.
Wife men watch every opportunity, and retrieve every mispent hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.
I will impute no defect to those two years which have slipped by since. Swift to Pope.
6. To fall into fault or error.
If he had been as you,
And you as he, you would have slipp'd like him;
But he, like you, would not have been so stern. Shakspeare.
One slippeth in his speech, but not from his heart. Ecclus.
An eloquent man is known far and near; but a man of understanding knoweth when he slippeth. Ecclus. xxi. 7.
7. To creep by oversight.
Some mistakes may have slipp'd into it; but others will be prevented by the names being now set at length. adv. to Damask.
8. To escape; to fall away out of the memory.
By the hearer it is still presumed, that if they be let slip for the present, what good forever they contain is lost, and that without all hope of recovery. Locke.
The mathematician proceeds upon propositions he has once demonstrated; and though the demonstration may have slipp'd out of his memory, he builds upon the truth. Addison.
Use the most proper methods to retain the ideas you have acquired; for the mind is ready to let many of them slip, unless some pains be taken to fix them upon the memory. Watts.
To SLIP. v. a.
1. To convey secretly.
In his officious attendance upon his mistress he tried to slip a powder into her drink. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.
2. To lose by negligence.
You are not now to think what's best to do,
As in beginnings; but what must be done,
Being thus enter'd; and slip no advantage
That may secure you. Len. Johnson's Catiline.
Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn
Or satiate fury yield it from our foe. Milton.
One ill man may not think of the mischief he could do, or slip the occasion. L'Estrange.
To slip the market, when thus fairly offered, is great im-prudence. Cadell.
For watching occasions to correct others in their discourses, and not to slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed. Locke.
Thus far my author has slipp'd his first design; not a letter of what has been yet said promising any ways the trial. Arbut.
3. To part twigs from the main body by laceration.
The runners spread from the inaster-roots, and have little sprouts or roots to them, which, being cut four or five inches long, make excellent sets: the branches also may be slipp'd and planted. Mortimer's Hu-banary.
4. To escape from; to leave sily.
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit it not.
—Oh, sir, Lucentio slipp'd me like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master. Shakspeare.
5. To let loose.
On Eryx altars lays
A lamb new fallen to the stormy seas;
Then slips his haulsers, and his anchors weighs. Dryden.
6. To let a dog loose.
The impatient greyhound, slipp'd from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe, to course the fearful hare. Dryden.
7. To throw off any thing that holds one.
Forced to alight, my horse slipp'd his bridle, and ran away. Swift.
8. To pass over negligently.
If our author gives us a list of his doctrines, with what reason can that about indulgences be slipp'd over? Atterbury.

SLI

- SLIP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of slipping; false step.
2. Error; mistake; fault.
I here put on him
What foreerics you please: marry, none so rank
As may discomur him.
But, as such wanton, wild, and usual slips,
As are most known to youth and liberty. Shakspeare.
Of the promise there made, our master hath failed us, by slip of memory, or injury of time. Wotton's Architecture.
This religious affection, which nature has implanted in man, would be the most enormous slip he could commit.
Mort's Audite against Atholm.
One casual slip is enough to weigh down the faithful service of a long life. L'Estrange.
Alonso, mark the characters;
And if th' impostor's pen have made a slip,
That shews it counterfeit, mark that and save me. Dryden.
Lighting upon a very easy slip I have made, in putting one seeingly indifferent word for another, that discovery opened to me this present view. Locke.
Any little slip is more conspicuous and observable in a good man's conduct than in another's, as it is not of a piece with his character. Addison's Spectator.
5. A twig torn from the main stock.
In truth, they are fewer, when they come to be discuss'd by reason, than otherwise they seem, when by heat of contention they are divided into many slips, and of every branch an heap is made. Hobbes.
The slips of thy vines have been brought into Spain. Abb.
Adoption strives with nature, and choice breeds
A native slip to us from foreign seeds. Shakspeare.
Thy mother took into her blanch'd bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble flock
Was graft with crab-tree slips, whose fruit thou art. Shakspeare.
Trees are apparell'd with flowers or herbs by boring holes in their bodies, and putting into them earth holpen with muck, and sowing seeds or slips of violets in the earth. Bacon.
So have I seen some tender slip,
Sav'd with care from Winter's nip,
The ride of her carnation train,
Pluck'd up by some unheedy fawn. Milton.
The labourer cuts
Young slips, and in the soil securely puts. Dryden.
They are propagated not only by the seed, but many also by the roots, and some by slips or cuttings. Ray on the Creation.
4. A leath or string in which a dog is held.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakspeare, Henry V.
God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively, nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slips, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramb.
5. An escape; a desertion. I know not whether to give the slip, he not originally taken from a dog that runs and leaves the string or slip in the leader's hand.
The more shame for her goodly slip,
To give to near a friend the slip. Hudibras.
The day did not like his companion, and gave him the slip,
and away into the woods. L'Estrange.
Their explications are not yours, and will give you the slip. Locke.
6. A long narrow piece.
Between these eastern and western mountains lies a slip of lower ground, which runs across the island. Addison.
SLIPBOARD. n. f. [from slip and board.] A board sliding in grooves.
I ventured to draw back the slipboard on the roof, contrived on purpose to let in air. Gulliver's Travels.
SLIPKNOT. n. f. [from slip and knot.] A bowknot; a knot easily untied.
They draw off so much line as is necessary, and fasten the rest upon the line-rowl with a slipknot, that no more line turn off. Mortimer's Mech. Exerc.
In large wounds a single knot first; over this a little linen compress, on which is to be made another single knot, and then a slipknot, which may be loosened upon inflammation. Sharp's Surgery.
SLIPPER, or Slippoe. n. f. [from slip.] A shoe without leather behind, into which the foot slips easily.
A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull;
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold;
A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps, and amber studs.
If he went abroad too much, he'd use
To give him slippers, and lock up his shoes. Raleigh.
Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knock'd the ground.
And the pres'd watch return'd a silver sound. Pope.
SLIPPER. adj. [Irish, Saxon.] Slippery; not firm. Obsolete. Perhaps never in use but for poetical convenience.
A trustless state of earthly things, and slipper hope
Of mortal men, that twinkle and sweat for naught. Keenser.

SLI

- SLIPPERINESS. n. f. [from slippery.]
1. State or quality of being slippery; smoothness; glibness.
We do not only fall by the slipperiness of our tongues, but we deliberately discipline them to mischief. Grav. of the Tongue.
The scirrhus may be distinguished by its want of inflammation in the skin, its smoothness, and slipperiness deep in the breast. Sharp's Surgery.
2. Uncertainty; want of firm footing.
SLIPPERY. adj. [Irish, Saxon; slipirig, Swedish.]
1. Smooth; glib.
They trim their feathers, which makes them oily and slip- pery, that the water slips off. Mortimer.
Oily substances only lubricate and make the bowels slip- pery. Arbutnot.
2. Not affording firm footing.
Did you know the art o' th' court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb,
Is certain falling; or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
His promise to trust to as slippery as ice. Tufter.
Their way shall be as slippery ways in the darkness. Jer. xxiii.
The slippery tops of human fate,
The gilded pinacles of state.
The higher they are rais'd, the giddier they are; the more slippery is their standing, and the deeper the fall. L'Estrange.
The highest hill is the most slippery place,
And fortune mocks us with a smiling face. Denham.
Beauty, like ice, our footing does betray;
Who can tread sure on the smooth slippery way? Dryden.
3. Hard to hold; hard to keep.
Thus surely bound, yet be not overbold,
The slippery god will try to loose his hold;
And various forms assume, to cheat thy sight,
And with vain images of beasts affright. Dryden's Georg.
4. Not standing firm.
When they fall, as being slippery flanders,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Doth one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. Shakspeare, Troilus and Cressida.
5. Uncertain; changeable; mutable; instable.
Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double boloms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal and exercise,
Are still together; who twine, as 'twere, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doir, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.
He looking down
With scorn or pity on the slippery state
Of kings, will tread upon the neck of fate. Denh. Sophy.
6. Not certain in its effect.
One sure trick is better than a hundred slippery ones. L'Estr.
7. [Lubrique, French.] Not chaste.
My wife is slippery. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.
SLIPPERY. adv. [from slip.] Slippery; easily sliding. A barbarous provincial word.
The white of an egg is rosy, slippery, and nutritious. Floyer.
SLIPSHOD. adj. [from slip and shod.] Having the shoes not pulled up at the heels, but barely slipped on.
The slipshod prentice from his master's door
Had par'd the dirt, and sprinkled round the floor. Swift.
SLIPSHOD. n. f. Bad liquor. A low word formed by redupli-cation of slip.
SLISH. n. f. A low word formed by reduplicating slash.
What! this a sleeve?
Here's snip and nip, and slish and dash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakspeare.
To SLIT. v. a. pret. and part. sit and slitted. [Irish, Saxon.]
To cut longwise.
To make plants medicinal slit the root, and infuse into it the medicine; as hellebore, opium, scammony, and then bind it up. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The deers of Arginufa had their ears divided, occasioned at first by slitting the ears. Brown's Sugar Errours.
Had it hit
The upper part of him, the blow
Had slit, as sure as that below. Hudibras.
We slit the preternatural body open. Wifeman's Surgery.
A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks. Temple.
If a tinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into thread, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.
He took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
SLIT. n. f. [Irish, Saxon.] A long cut, or narrow opening.
In St James's fields is a conduit of brick, into which jointh a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone; and in the brick conduit there is a wind-way, and in the round